As the book’s title suggests, this book uses anthropological methods and insights to study the practice of anthropology as an academic discipline. It considers the contexts that shape the discipline, especially its beliefs, its publications, and the degree to which what it produces is of value to others. American Anthropological Association, AAA, calls anthropology “the study of what makes us human.” It is the discipline which explores the rise and fall of human civilizations. It tries to understand the cultural development and biological evolution of homo sapiens from a variety of disciplines.
