This was an interactive, panel-led discussion of the myths and misconceptions that limit the use of pro bono mediation resources by legal services and pro bono organizations and programs. 2007-2008 Campus Judicial Board

The Indiana University Office of Student Ethics and Anti-Harassment Programs is currently accepting applications for positions on the 2007-2008 Campus Judicial Board. At Indiana University, students currently enrolled in either undergraduate or graduate degree programs are held to the standards defined by the Code of Student Rights, Responsibilities, and Conduct. When allegations of personal misconduct occurring off of the Bloomington campus are reported to the Office of Student Ethics, the Campus Judicial Board responds by conducting informal conferences with the student. During these conferences, the Board determines responsibility and, if need be, recommends an appropriate and educational sanction to the Dean of Students.

The Campus Judicial Board is looking for representation from both the undergraduate and graduate degree levels. If interested, you must be able to devote a three-hour block of time each week to hearing judicial cases. There will also be a mandatory training session that all Board members must attend early in the fall semester. Leadership positions will be available and determined once the Board has been selected. To apply, please submit a current resume to Adam Henry, co-adviser of the Campus Judicial Board, at admhenry@indiana.edu. The deadline for applications will be at 5 p.m. on Friday, April 6. Interviews will be conducted during the week of April 9 through 13 and, if need be, April 16 through 18. If you are selected for an interview, further information will be sent to you via e-mail. Please feel free to contact Adam if you have any questions or concerns.

Though closely related, the words are not synonyms. In England the word "maritime" referred to the cases arising upon the high seas, whereas "admiralty" meant primarily cases of a local nature involving police regulations of shipping, harbors, fishing, and the like. In India, a landmark law which makes education a fundamental right for all children between six and 14, has come into effect. But many challenges lie ahead in ensuring access to education for all in a country with the world's largest number of young people. Prime Minister Singh is promising enough funds to ensure access to schools for all children, irrespective of gender or social category. According to estimates the government will need $38 billion in the next five years to implement the act. The number of children who are out of school in India is staggering, an estimated eight million of them. Many of them are girls, who often stay out of school to do household chores or look after siblings. Start studying Indiana law. Movie violence these days is louder and bloodier than ever before. When a bad guy was shot in a black-and-white Western, the most we saw was a puff of smoke and a few drops of fake blood. He found that television habits established at the age of eight influenced aggressive behaviour through childhood and adolescent years. The more violent were the programs preferred by boys in the third grade, the more aggressive was their behaviour, both at that time and ten years later. G. In the debate about execution and human dignity, supporters and opponents of the death penalty have found very little common ground.
