This article will analyze both revolutions, illustrating that the revolution of 1905 was both a precursor and cause of the 1917 revolution, while having its own precursors and causes. Aided by brutal defeats and unprecedented loss of life in two wars, the Russian revolutions of 1905 and 1917 were the collective backlash of the masses against the corrupt, incompetent, and uncaring autocracy of the Tsarist Regime which was unable and unwilling to change with the times. Moreover, the revolutions hardly yielded the type of productive and egalitarian change that masses called for. Thus, these revol... Russian Revolution books. Russian Revolution crossword #1. Count Witte and the Tsarist Government in the 1905 Revolution. Indiana University Press. Howard D. Mehlinger, John M. Thompson. The pivotal year 1905 posed an unwelcome challenge for Russian conservatives. Disturbed by mounting social and political unrest, they found it appalling that the Tsar should bend to oppositionist demands by granting an elected legislative assembly in the form of a State Duma. Even if they refused to admit it, they knew that this change in state structure meant limiting the Tsar's autocratic power. 4. Other rightist groups, such as the Patriotic Union (Otechestvennyi soiuz) and the United Nobility (Ob â€œedinennoe dvorianstvo), endeavored not so much to shape public opinion as to exert direct influence on the government, especially in promoting policies advantageous to their own favored social and economic status.
