"Once upon a time in Mondstadt, a man with stars in his eyes—no, a boy still—spoke those words to Diluc Ragnvindr. The first time Diluc heard them, they had been the last words he wanted to hear through the downpour. The first time he heard them, his father lay dead in his arms. Diluc smiled and closed the book. Because that wasn’t how this went, the book promptly came off the ground, hovered for a moment, then exploded into a thousand dandelion seeds. I know you did. I liked that. They were doomed to be unreconciled into eternity. Had he known then, he might have listened. But Diluc did not know then, and the force of fury punching through his body bent him in half. We live in a divided age. Division is prevalent at all levels of society. In fact, for many, division is simply the new normal—the unwavering characteristic of our age. While we may desire to live in a time of peace, understanding, and acceptance, we also struggle to believe anything like that is possible. Paul Jeon is under no delusion that things are much better in the church than in the world. Yet in his very short, accessible, and pastoral book, Unreconciled, he gives hope to those who might despair over the disunity or division that pervades the church in general or their particular church.

Download Unreconciled books, The summons to live a radical life for God has led us away from doing the very basic things he has commanded. Instead of changing the world, our Lord Jesus calls us to change the way we approach relationships. Specifically, he challenges us to pursue reconciliation. Unreconciled: The New Norm invites Christians, especially those who are busy seeking to do great things for a great God, to remember the command "to go and be reconciled" and to renew their commitment to live in obedience to the things God has revealed.
